Casino Has Benefitted County

County, she said.

"They've been great community partners," the county exec said of Hollywood Casino Perryville.

She noted the casino's charitable partnerships and donations.

The county and the town of Perryville have both benefitted from a share of the Video Lottery Terminals.

"Over the past five years, Video Lottery Terminal revenues to our community have totaled more than $30 million, with a third of that going directly to the Town of Perryville," Moore said.

For the county, the added money has allowed them to resurface additional roads, add to the economic development office's programs and other services to the taxpayers, she said.

A portion of the annual funds received from the casino has been used for VLT grants, a competitive process that awards grants to a variety of non-profit groups throughout the county.

Moore said this added money has been a blessing for the county during tight economic times.

Mary Haggerty

"I was born in the old Bohemia Farm," said Mary during an interview in her living room on Tuesday afternoon. "I lived on the top of Sandy Bottom hill. We could look up the road and see the bus coming. Mother had a carrom board (pocket game). The kids would come from miles around before school to shoot carrom. It means you ricochet off something. She piled the kids in the dining room an hour before school."

"I went to school here in Cecilton at George Biddle High School. There was probably 100 kids from grade school to high school. All this stuff was in the good old days for some of us. Some of the kids in Knight's Island and Sandy Bottom walked five miles through the muddy roads."

Roads were not paved like they are today. "The farmers who lived off of the road, had to leave their milk cans on a milk bench so the milk truck drivers could reach out and get them. There was a man who had 5-6 milk cans everyday. We were allowed to get milk out of one of the cans, get what we needed and put the lid back on. Can you imagine being able to do that nowadays?"

One of Mary's jobs was not what she expected. "I worked on the first atomic bomb, but never knew it," she said of her job in Hanford, Washington. "Everything was top secret and had a code letter. Those were rough years. It was 1943 when World War II was at its worst. D-Day was so quiet, you could have heard a pin drop. A lot of locals were there because it's where you could get work."

Back in Mary's "good old days," Cecilton was a thriving small town. "Pete Stradley's store had a little shack behind the Cecilton library part. That's where the kids bought school lunches if they had money. Was about five or ten cents. They could go down to the old drug store and buy ice cream. There were five grocery stores in town at one time. Ted Ford's Store, Hoover's was way down town. We had an ice cream parlor, Dallas and Miss Daisy sold ice cream in their living room. McCubbin's and Weinroth's were dry goods stores. They had scales where they weighed cows. At one time we had a movie theater in the old school. That was in 1939 when we went to the new school."

At one time, Cecilton High was one of the best in the state. "Our volleyball team won the Eastern Shore Championship. Played down in Preston (Caroline County) and won by one point. We had some old farm girls on the team who were very good."

When she was a young girl, people did not have to lock doors or worry about being harmed so much. "When I was six years old, we'd run down to Fredricktown all the time and never have to worry about being picked up."

"The Depression were bad years. There were people who would walk by and ask if they could cut wood or something just for a meal. My mother would dole out something for these transients as they came by."

Mary Haggerty stays humble, has written a book titled, Cecilton: Chronicles of a Small Town in Rural America among others and has witnessed history. "I've always been active in church, 4-H, Girl Scouts, teaching girls to sew and president of the PTA, but I've never had anything interesting to write about. I've never built a bridge or shot a man or anything like that. I've never accomplished anything that meant anything, but I've had a real interesting life."

has parking issues.

A path at the rear of the building will allow pedestrians to travel from the middle school, past the elementary school and to the library. There will be an access point from the adjoining neighborhood.

Ballfields will be reconfigured on the site. There will be two playgrounds on the library side of the building - one for the littlest students and the other for the older elementary school kids. The architect even added a blank white wall on the playground side of the building so the area can be used to show movies.

The Board of Education approved the schematic plan for the new Gilpin Manor Elementary School.
